Table of Contents

Acknowledgments

Introduction: Bharati Mukherjee's Fiction and the Postcolonial Debate ................................................................. 11

I Mukherjee's Aesthetics against the Backdrop of Jacques Derrida's Idea of 'Text' and 'Literature'

1 Bharati Mukherjee, an American Writer ........................................... 21
2 Jacques Derrida's Idea of 'Text' and 'Literature' .......................... 33
3 The Responsible Reader: Where Derrida and Mukherjee Meet ................................................................. 47

II Full vs. Empty? The Deconstruction of Binaries in The Tiger's Daughter and Wife

1 Mukherjee's Early Novels and the Derridean 'Supplement' ........ 55
2 The Tiger's Daughter: Struggling to Fill the Void ..................... 65
3 Wife as a Murderous Search for 'Real' Life ................................ 82

III Poison or Medicine? Undecidability in Mukherjee's Short Stories and The Holder of the World

1 Jacques Derrida's 'Pharmakon' ..................................................... 101
2 Pharmakonic Aspects in "The World According to Hsü" and "Orbiting" .......... 105
3 The Holder of the World: Deconstructing the Concepts of History, Culture, and Nationality ......................... 124
Table of Contents

IV Writing Life: Autobiographical Tracing in Jasmine and Leave It to Me

1 Form and Critique of Mukherjee's 'Go-West' Novels..........................141

2 Jasmine and Leave It to Me as a Derridean and a Freudian Interpretation of 'Trace'........................................153

3 Divergent Literary Tracings: Evolution vs. Entropy ...............182

V Neither Arche Nor Telos: Scrambled Signification in Mukherjee's 'Undecidable' Trilogy

1 'Différance' and Chronology..................................................191

2 Many Doors, No Exit: The Perception of Reality in Desirable Daughters .................207

3 The Tree Bride: A Plea against the 'Terror of the Real'......222

4 Outlook: 'Différance' and Miss New India..........................234

Conclusion: Literature as an Undecidable Art Form, or: The Literariness of Life.........................................................243

Works Cited ..............................................................................255

Index ..................................................................................275