1 Introduction: the argument of this book 1
1.1 Overview: the relationship between syntax and semantics 2
1.2 Predicate-argument structures 7
1.3 The metaphysics of thematic roles 16
1.4 The structure of this book 19

Part I: Research programme 25

Introduction 27

2 A Culturalistic Pragmatist research programme 29
2.1 Research programmes 36
2.1.1 On research programmes in general 36
2.1.2 The need for a new research programme 40
2.2 A new research programme 52
2.2.1 The subject-matter of the programme 52
2.2.2 The “individual” level in the model 53
2.2.3 Observable facts, observations, and heuristics 55
2.2.4 Implementing the data level 66
2.2.5 Excursus: converging evidence 71
2.2.6 Multidisciplinarity 73
2.2.7 Species, community, and sciences 75
2.3 Excursus: a brief sketch of “Chomskyan Linguistics” 78
2.4 Action-theory grounded in lifeworld differentiations 83
2.5 Summary of part I 94
Part II: Grounding the linking competence in sub-competences — 97

Introduction — 99

3 Perception, conceptualization, and action — 100
3.1 Perception — 100
3.1.1 Grounding the talk about perception in practical differentiations — 101
3.1.2 The significance of perception for the linking competence — 105
3.1.3 Sensation — 106
3.1.3.1 The eye — 107
3.1.3.2 The lateral geniculate nucleus and the primary visual cortex — 109
3.1.3.3 The integration of basic visual features — 110
3.1.3.4 Two visual pathways — 115
3.1.3.5 Motion/movement perception — 118
3.1.3.6 The embodied nature of the percept — 121
3.1.4 Determinants in identification (I) — 123
3.1.4.1 Salience and the power of the stimulus — 127
3.2 Identification and conceptualization: actional notions and their grounding — 129
3.2.1 Identification in perception and conceptualization for action — 130
3.2.1.1 Determinants in identification (II): pertinence and the power of the perceiver — 137
3.2.1.2 Features, affordances, relations, and the power of frequency — 143
3.2.1.3 Causality as the enhancement of constant conjunctions and stimulus generalization — 153
3.2.1.4 The actor/cognizer as (limited/self-serving) pragmatic — 162
3.2.2 Action competence and intersubjectivity — 171
3.2.2.1 Action competence — 172
3.2.2.2 Intersubjectivity and understanding action — 179
3.2.2.3 Reasons and causes — 183
3.2.3 The significance of attribution for the linking competence — 187
3.2.4 Case study: attribution in precarious events — 192
3.2.4.1 The research project “Syntax of Hessian Dialects (SyHD)” — 193
3.2.4.2 Scenario D — 195
3.2.4.3 Scenario B — 198

Part III: The linking competence — 311

Introduction — 313

4 Linking syntax and semantics — 313

4.1 The division of labor of the formal constituents — 317

4.1.1 The “bare” construction (irrespective of inflectional morphology) — 318

4.1.2 The “bare” noun in the NP and PP (irrespective of inflectional morphology) — 321

4.1.3 The “bare” verb (plus preposition) (irrespective of inflectional morphology) — 325

4.1.4 Agreement morphology — 330

4.1.5 Phrase order — 332

4.1.6 Case morphology — 335

4.1.6.1 Case in general — 335

4.1.6.2 Case study: the German dative — 346

4.1.7 The multilayered instruction — 363

4.2 Reducing the remaining formal underspecification — 364

4.2.1 The PSC preference as an epiphenomenon of a (responsible) causer preference — 365

4.2.2 Animacy and the RCP — 368

4.2.3 Individuation and the RCP — 370

4.2.4 Person and the RCP — 372

4.2.5 Empathy and the RCP — 373

4.2.6 The RCP and indexical instructions — 374

4.3 Linking in performance — 375

4.3.1 Motivated construction-conceptualization mappings — 376

4.3.2 The utterance as instruction – obeying the instruction — 382

4.3.3 The utterance as instruction – building up the instruction — 395

4.4 Some German linking phenomena — 403

4.4.1 “Unergative” versus “unaccusative” constructions — 404

4.4.2 Auxiliary choice — 411

4.4.3 Conditions on passivization and imperativeization — 420

4.4.4 The dative alternation — 424

4.4.5 The locative alternation — 430

4.4.6 The conative alternation — 434

4.4.7 The partitive alternation — 439

4.4.8 Resultative constructions — 444
4.4.9 Weather verbs — 448
4.4.10 A note on coercion — 455
4.5 Future prospects: predictions and consequences — 456
4.6 Summary of part III — 467

5 Conclusion — 469

Glossary — 473

Appendix: The status of traditional semantic notions in the present theory — 483
